PUBLIC LEDGER.

THE NATURAL BRIDGE.

LEXINGTON, Va., October 1, 1869.
Correspondence PUBLIC LEDGER.

There are two routes by which the Natural Bridge can be reached. If you have sufficient nerve, and confidence in the genus John, you can take the stage at Bonanza's, on the Virginia and Tennessee railroad, every alternate morning, and by 3 p.m. reach the bridge; or, by coming to Lexington, via Lynchburg, can take the daily stage at 6 a.m. and arrive at the Bridge at 11 o'clock. The Bridge is fourteen miles from Lexington and thirty six from Bonanza's; the stage route between these two points running directly over the Bridge, the road being barely wide enough for two vehicles to pass which, considering that it is 240 feet to the bed of the creek, made it, before a strong fence was erected on each edge of the road, a nice point of prudence to teamsters.

The Bridge is a "big thing;" and though I am phlegmatic, rather excitable and indifferent, rather than curious, I must add my testimony to that of thousands, and recommend everybody to visit "the greatest curiosity in the world." It will repay the bouncing and jolting one receives in the stage, and all the vexation an irritable traveler may receive on a rough road. It is literally a natural bridge—the handiwork of Nature. In its erection, there was no display or plans made by ingenious architects; no proposals advertised in the paper of the largest circulation; no inspections and banquets by turtle-eating aldermen; no estimates of the probable cost, no controversy about long span or short span; no fuss and feathers, or congratulatory wine-bibbing, at its completion. Nothing of the sort. Old Mother Nature took the entire job, and completed it at her own convenience, and has carved her imprint boldly on the face of her work.

A little limpid stream of water, springing up somewhere in the mountains of West Virginia, came trickling down the rocky slope, seeking, like a lost infant, its higher friends. Flowing on its tormented course for many miles through meadow and glade, through hamlet and forest, it came at last plump against a huge wall of flinty granite—the summit of which appeared to its feeble vision like the clouds. Its weary journey was apparently at an end; it cuddled itself up into a little eddy at the base of this Charybdis wall; it sang and murmured, it danced and whirled; it foamed and seethed, then slept. It threw the whole of its little tide and strength against the fifty surface of the rock-ribbed impediment, then recoiled; the craggy precipice stood firmer than the walls of Troy. Continual dripping of water, the philosophers say, will wear away a bandit, and the result of the efforts or convulsions of nature. To the philosophers and geologists I will leave the solution of the question as to how that little stream of water made its way through that wall of granite; abandon the poetry of the scene, and come to the prose.

The Natural Bridge, then, is simply an arch of solid, flinty rock over Cedar creek, about fifty feet long, twenty feet wide, and forty feet thick; the arch being about one hundred and ninety feet above the bed of the creek, which makes the bridge about two hundred and fifty feet high, measuring from the edge of the wagon road over it to the surface of the water beneath it. These are the dimensions; I can't hope to give you a picture of the scenery. It is wide enough for any enthusiast, and tame enough for an artist; rough enough for a bandit, and smooth enough for a philosopher, who would design to wear breeches and a straw hat. The walls beneath the arch bear the marks of venturesome youths, whose schoolboyish ambition prompted them to clamber up an almost perpendicular surface, and with chisel or blade carve their names in the rock. I yielded to the example, and following the footsteps of the boldest, I intended my respectable cognomen, in good Gothic characters, high upon the wall. I couldn't restrain my hand from forming, as I went to my own, the name of a young lady in Tennessee. I trust that no one will accuse me of taking people's names in vain. As young ladies are liable to leap their names at some period of their lives, I thought it clever to preserve one, at least, in an imperishable monument.

The Bridge is yearly increasing in popularity as a summer resort. After the close of the winter season, the country is surmounted, it is a pleasant locality to spend a month during the heat of summer. There are no springs or mineral waters there, but hunting and fishing grounds are good. A very respectable hotel, and one or two large boarding houses are located near the Bridge, where, I am assured by many, that the fat of the land is served up at very reasonable rates. The country about, indeed, seems to be the land of milk and honey; and if the impromptu dinner I partook of is a signifier, good living may be expected in the light of the season. A postoffice is located there, which is an accommodation for visitors.

The vicinity of the Bridge, and for many miles in either direction, is very attractive; the landscapes are beautiful as a picture. The farms, though hilly, are in good condition, and tolerably well cultivated. I am informed that crops this season do not yield as was anticipated. Corn about one-fourth the average. Fruit is plentiful. I have seen many orchards that were very tempting to the eye; and did not very far from familiar dogs, I should have often been tempted to make incursions on the outskirts of their orchards. Thus it is; the virtuous habits of youth are never forgotten. And I shall remember at this moment one very good one—i. e., to cease writing when I have nothing more to write.

LUXEMBOURG ROT.

Cuba—Quenda's Address to the Spanish Soldiers.

Spanish Soldiers: For the second time I address you. The liberating army crowned with glory throughout the island, the resources we are constantly receiving from Ultramar, the multitude of men who hasten to take up arms, the soldiers of the Spanish ranks who seek the clemency of the government of the republic, all will prove to you that the triumph of the holy cause of liberty is a consummated fact, and that Spain will have to withdraw her forces from a land which for so many centuries she has oppressed. Tyranny has found its grave in the Island of Cuba with the fall of the Bourbons.

Slavery, the shame and disgrace of every civilized country, has disappeared forever, and the republic, with its glorious liberty, appears to regenerate the people and to relieve them of the heavy chains of despotism.

The Spanish government, convinced of its impotence, with a civil war which devours it, with its exhausted treasury, unpopular among all the nations of the globe, now feeds its fury on the sons of heroic Cuba and assassins without pity prisoners of war. Horror and shame! The descendants of Cid, the champion, and of Pelayo have degenerated greatly, and forgotten in their fury the rules of warfare adopted in all civilized countries.

I love my country, but who detest spilling the blood of the conquered, and who have placed in my rank hundreds of Spaniards, I write you to hasten to unite yourselves to the army of the free. The Cuban people do not hate the races, but alone desire to be independent, and it shall be; desire to be free, and no human power shall prevent it.

Fly from those vile ranks, sullied by crime and injustice, and come where we breathe the pure air of liberty—here all men are equal and do not bend the forehead before the presence of a King or a sullied Queen. If I write you in this manner it is because I consider myself strong; because I have under command a numerous army of brave men, and because the liberty of Cuba enjoys the sympathy of all civilized countries.

Present yourselves to our pickets; they have orders to receive you and to take you to headquarters. If you would be free and live with honor come to our ranks; it is not yet too late.

The General-in-Chief of the liberating army of Cuba, MANUEL QUEVEDA.

Double Elopement—A Gay and Festive Youth Creates a Sensation.

From the Augusta Constitutionalist.

The lower portion of the city was somewhat convulsed yesterday morning with the report that two daughters of a Mrs. Hubbard—Mattie and Bettie—had eloped, and that they were carrying off with them a large sum of money. The report was so startling, and the girls were so well known, that it created a great sensation. The girls were both very young, and were said to be very beautiful. They were both very fond of their father, and were said to be very obedient. The report was so startling, and the girls were so well known, that it created a great sensation.

Bogus Reporters—The Landers and Inventors that Prey Upon the Press.

From the N. Y. Telegram.

The newspaper profession has long suffered from the number of swindlers and "beats" who make use of it to carry out their nefarious schemes against the pockets of unsuspecting citizens. As a general rule, these chaps have no connection whatever with any newspaper, and a little exercise of judgment and common sense on the part of their victims would suffice to acquaint them with the fact. A nice young man named Brown is the latest specimen of the craft. After successfully "beating" around in small matters he was emboldened to try his hand at forgery, making use of the names of certain well-known journalists for the purpose. In this he was caught, and very likely his absence from the metropolis will be a protracted one. We regret to say that some of these professional swindlers find their way into a newspaper office, and although expulsion instantly follows their detection, yet the shame which they bring on the profession is very great. At balls and parties during the winter, they swarm around like harpies. In the committee room they may be seen taking every advantage of indulging for the first time in a "square meal" and drinking themselves into a state of beastliness. This evil reached such an extent last winter that respectable journalists could not be induced to visit the committee room during a ball. The only means of combating this evil is for ball committees to refuse admittance to any person claiming connection with a journal and not provided with the necessary written authorization from the editor of that journal. Again, any conduct unbecoming a gentleman or journalist, which is accredited representative of a paper may be guilty of, should be instantly reported to the editor of that paper. By this means the journalistic profession will be weeded of the swindlers, loafers and "beats" who occasionally creep into it, and the true gentlemen of the press will not be compelled to endure the shame and humiliation of having such persons pointed out to them as professional bachelors.

The Health of Women.

That this should be the great aim of all improvements in domestic appliances there cannot be a doubt, and that a healthy substitute for the exhaustive, degrading, debilitating—may we not say demoralizing—needle, with its everlasting "stitch," "stitch," "stitch," and its accompaniments of unhappiness and often misery. Our sisters and wives and daughters have, where the family is large and a good stock of clothes is required, and the family purse is limited, a terrible amount of drudgery to endure. They have no time for reading, for attending amusements, or for self-improvement. Very often they are denied the ordinary intercourse of society; oftentimes many a mother is little better than a slave. But there is no excuse for this state of things any longer. Woman's emancipation is effected by that perfection of mechanical contrivance—the sewing machine, and foolish are they who from false notions of economy, deny themselves its blessings. The new silent Wheeler & Wilson machines can be purchased at No. 256 Second street, opposite Court Park, by paying ten dollars per month. Terms so liberal should induce every family, no matter how moderate their means, to possess one of these "household fairies."

A Paris correspondent relates the following:

A great noise was heard this morning in one of the most elegant houses of the Rue de Rivoli, and soon after the people thus attracted before the doorway saw a well dressed man rushing down stairs with an indefinite bundle of things in one hand and a bottle in the other. He threw down the bundle in the middle of the court yard, and poured upon it the contents of the bottle, to wit: wine, set fire, causing the whole to blaze furiously. Several women were heard crying and sobbing up stairs in the most piteous manner. It turned out afterward that the gentleman has a wife and three daughters who evince an inexhaustible and immoderate love for false chignons. They possessed already twenty of these artificial ornaments, and were going to purchase four more—larger and thicker, in accordance with the very last fashion—when the angry husband and father, tired of being continually called upon to satisfy such an extraordinary taste for chignons, seized the whole stock, got a bottle of petroleum, and set the false hair blazing in the court, to the great amusement of all present.

The excavations in the Hoosac Tunnel have recently been seriously interfered with by the occurrence of a soft place, but the workmen have at last overcome the difficulties, and have reached a point one hundred feet beyond. The soft place was about twelve feet in width, composed of soft and rotten rock filled with water, which kept slowly falling until timbered up. The tunnel fell for the whole width, leaving a cavity above about forty feet high, all of which had to be filled up and made firm with wood and timber. The material beneath this place, it is stated, is the best hitherto met with, being mica slate, and blaste off in large flakes, suitable for building purposes. The rate of the progress now is about forty feet per week on the east end of the tunnel, it is reported.

A New York speculator, returning home last Friday, thus announced the result of his operations to the family group: "No more silk dresses this winter, my dear; no more balls and parties; no more opera boxes; and no more waiting with his subject." "No more infernal wingers and dingers, and no more nonsense of any sort, Matilda." Surely, the most uninitiated would have known that the man had been in Wall street that day.
